Introduction

Meridian New Zealand's diverse business is highly dependent on information and information systems to achieve its mission. Governing information security risk management is essential to ensure that Meridian can achieve its mission and fulfil its business objectives.

The Information Security Governance Board (ISGB) has been assigned the task of providing an oversight and direction for Meridian's Information Security risk management activities. This includes, but is not limited to:

- Promoting information security awareness across Meridian's business divisions.
- Reviewing and endorsing the information security risk assurance framework, information risk tolerance framework and information security risk management plans.
- Reviewing and endorsing governance artefacts such as information security strategy, frameworks, policies, standards, and guidelines.
- Reviewing information security related audit findings and ensuring management responses are agreed, provided business priority and, where required, assisting implementation.
- Reviewing and approving information security policy exception requests.
- Reviewing escalated security incidents or events and assisting, where required, with recommended actions.
- Reviewing and approving information security management reporting requirements.

Membership

As a business initiative to adopt a risk-based approach to information security, Meridian ISGB must be representative of Meridian's business divisions. A majority of business representation is highly recommended to ensure that information security risk management is integrated in business initiatives.
